

WOULD YOU RATHER QUESTIONS FOR COUPLES

Pick apart, one box each, then compare. Every question has three endings at talkdeep.me/would-you-rather-for-couples

1 There's one blanket and two of you. Would you rather hog it and deny everything, or freeze and bring it up for years?

2 Your show has a new episode and they're away. Would you rather wait for them, or watch ahead and fake the gasp?

3 Tonight's dinner: would you rather go ambitious and ruin it, or order the usual, again?

4 It's 11pm and you're mid-argument. Would you rather stay up and finish it, or go to bed and finish it tomorrow?

5 On a seven-hour drive, would you rather do all the driving, or navigate and guard the snacks?

6 You get a text that says "we need to talk". Would you rather call back right away, or panic quietly for three hours?

7 Their aunt is telling that story about you, and she has it wrong again. Would you rather laugh along, or correct the facts?

8 They've loaded the dishwasher wrong. Would you rather reload it in silence, or leave it and stay happy?

9 It's Sunday morning. Would you rather stay in bed till noon, or be up at seven with the whole day ahead?

10 You're at a party you both dreaded. Would you rather give the secret signal at nine, or stay till they turn the lights on?

11 They've made your worst photo their wallpaper. Would you rather let them keep it, or delete it and blame an update?

12 Your pet name for each other: would you rather shout it across the grocery store, or never say it outside the house?

13 There's a huge spider in the tub. Would you rather catch it yourself, or move out together?

14 A friend tells you a secret. Would you rather tell your partner anyway, or keep it, even from them?

15 They love a movie you secretly hate. Would you rather finally say so, or watch it every year and smile?

16 The dessert menu arrives. Would you rather order your own and guard it, or share one and count every bite?

17 There's one slice left and you both want it. Would you rather eat it and own it, or leave it and resent them for a week?

18 Cooking together in one small kitchen: would you rather be head chef giving orders, or sous chef who chops and judges?

19 Their food looks better than yours. Would you rather steal from their plate, or suffer and stare at it all evening?

20 Someone's flirting with your partner. Would you rather step in and take their hand, or stay back and enjoy the show?

21 You're on opposite sides of a party. Would you rather wink at them all night, or text them from ten feet away?

22 You've recorded their snoring. Would you rather play it at breakfast, or save it for the anniversary toast?

23 Getting ready to go out: would you rather always be ready and waiting, or always be late and worth it?

24 The thermostat war: would you rather sweat all winter and say nothing, or turn it down and hear about it?

25 There's one charger left. Would you rather give it up and let your phone die, or take it and hide the cable?

26 Building a flat-pack dresser: would you rather read every instruction aloud, or build it by feel, six screws spare?

27 You're lost and it's getting dark. Would you rather stop and ask a stranger, or drive on and call it scenic?

28 It's the last dance at a wedding. Would you rather drag them onto the floor, or sit it out, hold hands and heckle?

29 Your partner's wrong in front of friends. Would you rather correct them gently, right there, or bring it up at home?

30 They ask, "do I look tired?" Would you rather tell the truth, softly, or tell a beautiful lie?

31 You come home after a bad day. Would you rather tell them all of it right away, or take ten quiet minutes, then talk?

32 Breakfast in bed: would you rather make it and sleep in the crumbs, or get it and praise the burnt toast?

33 Your song comes on in a store. Would you rather dance in the aisle, or pretend you've never met?

34 It's pouring, with one umbrella. Would you rather share it and both get half soaked, or give it up and walk behind them?

35 For a whole year, would you rather choose dinner every single night, or never choose and eat whatever you're given?

36 You catch them staring at you. Would you rather stare back till someone laughs, or pretend you haven't noticed?

37 Their family's famous dish needs salt. Would you rather say it's the best you've had, or ask for the recipe and fix it?

38 Your partner texts "fine." with a period. Would you rather ask what's wrong right away, or reply "fine." and start a war?

39 You see them typing, then nothing. Would you rather ask what they deleted, or say nothing and wonder all day?

40 They text you from the next room. Would you rather get up and answer in person, or text back and stay under the blanket?

41 Your text to them landed in the family chat. Would you rather own it and send a second one, or say your phone was hacked?

42 Date night at home: would you rather build a fort with no phones, or cook a dish you can't spell?

43 You've got a free week away. Would you rather take the beach with no plans and no shoes, or eleven museums and a spreadsheet?

44 From now on, would you rather plan every date yourself, or be surprised every time?

45 Your best friend has an opinion of your partner. Would you rather hear what they really think, or let them keep pretending?

46 You can have one space all to yourself. Would you rather take the whole living room, or one tiny room nobody else may enter?

47 Would you rather get a dog that only ever loves your partner, or a cat that only just tolerates you?

48 For your anniversary, would you rather get a huge surprise, or exactly what's on the list?

49 Would you rather swap phones for one full day, or agree never to look, ever?

50 You'll be apart for three months. Would you rather call every night even with no news, or write one long letter every week?

51 Would you rather get one handwritten love letter a year, or one short text every single day?

52 When people ask how you met, would you rather tell the true version, or keep the better one?

53 You owe a week to family. Would you rather spend it at their family's, or have your own family stay with you both?

54 They're in love with a hobby you don't get. Would you rather take it up properly with them, or cheer from the couch forever?

55 Your ex is at the same wedding as you. Would you rather go over together and say hi, or hide by the buffet together?

56 For the next ten years of date nights, would you rather keep the same table every week, or go somewhere you can't pronounce?

57 Miles apart, one free night: would you rather watch one movie together on a call, or trade voice notes about your day?

58 Your flight's been canceled. Would you rather sleep on the airport floor, or rent a car and drive through the dark?

59 You're in a new city. Would you rather use one paper map and no phones all day, or book every minute in advance?

60 You're sharing one suitcase for a week. Would you rather pack it for both of you, or let them pack it with no looking?

61 Your vacation photos: would you rather do ten takes till it's perfect, or keep it blurry, thumb in the shot?

62 It's day one of camping and it's pouring. Would you rather stay and make it a story, or drive home and never speak of it?

63 You get your first date over again. Would you rather do it exactly the same, or fix everything that went wrong?

64 You can redo your first kiss. Would you rather keep it, awkward and all, or redo it with what you know now?

65 You've found every message you ever sent each other. Would you rather read them together out loud, or delete the first year?

66 You know the exact moment you knew. Would you rather tell them exactly when, or keep it for yourself?

67 You find your first playlist. Would you rather play it loud and cringe together, or leave it where it was?

68 They come home with a bad haircut and they love it. Would you rather say so today, or say nothing and let it grow out?

69 For the rest of your life, would you rather get a small note every week, or one huge speech, one time only?

70 You get one compliment a day from now on. Would you rather hear it out loud in public, or whispered so only you can hear?

71 Date night with a twist: would you rather meet as strangers at a bar, or stay in and dress up anyway?

72 They're very proud of a dish that isn't great. Would you rather love it and eat it forever, or tell them it needs salt?

73 You're eight time zones apart. Would you rather stay up till 3am for their call, or miss it and get some sleep?

74 You're saying goodbye at the station. Would you rather make it long and miss the train, or quick with no looking back?

75 Their friend needs your guest room. Would you rather say yes for a month, or say no and be the bad guy?

76 You've forgotten something important. Would you rather admit it at once, or fix it before they notice?

77 For a whole year, would you rather do all the cooking and no cleaning, or all the cleaning and no cooking?

78 Would you rather hold hands everywhere, always, or only in the dark?

79 They've made dinner far too hot. Would you rather eat it all, sweating and smiling, or reach for the milk and admit defeat?

80 On a six-hour road trip, would you rather hear their playlist the whole way, or drive in silence the whole way?

81 For one whole year, would you rather reach each other by text only, or by phone calls only?

82 One date, one rule: would you rather have no phones all night, or say yes to everything all night?

83 The wedding thank-you cards: would you rather write them all in one night, or go slow and miss every deadline?

84 Your first holidays as newlyweds: would you rather host both families yourselves, or hide out, just the two of you?

85 You're moving in and they own one awful chair. Would you rather keep the chair, for love, or let it get lost in the move?

86 Your first fight as newlyweds: would you rather tell your best friend everything, or keep it between you two?

87 You're meeting their friends. Would you rather go big and tell your best story, or stay quiet, smile and learn names?

88 You're dating someone new. Would you rather post them on day one, or stay offline for a year?

89 Their old hoodie is very soft. Would you rather steal it and deny it, or ask nicely and give it back?

90 Three months in, your first trip: would you rather go far and test everything, or stay close, an hour from home?

91 One of you gets a big offer abroad. Would you rather move abroad together, or stay close to family?

92 Would you rather never argue again, or keep arguing but always make up within an hour?

93 Would you rather know everything about your partner's past, or none of it at all?

94 Would you rather always say what you feel, or always know what they feel?

95 You get one look outside of time. Would you rather see the day you met from their side, or see one day ten years ahead?

96 For the rest of your lives, would you rather live ten minutes from everything, or an hour from anyone?

97 For a big day, would you rather invite everyone you've ever met, or have just you two and a witness?

98 You get a whole year off together. Would you rather see the whole world, or build one home from scratch?

99 You'll carry one regret for life. Would you rather regret something you did together, or something you never tried?

100 Would you rather ask them anything and get the whole truth, once, or never feel you need to ask?

101 Would you rather go back and live your first year together again, or stay right where you are?

102 When it all goes wrong, would you rather be told you're right, or be held when you're wrong?

103 Twenty years from now, would you rather stay in the same town with the same faces, or go somewhere you both must learn?

104 When you retire, would you rather live in a van with no fixed address, or keep a garden and never leave it?

105 Only one of your dreams can happen. Would you rather chase theirs and shelve yours, or chase yours while they shelve theirs?

106 A letter arrives from the two of you at 80. Would you rather read it now, or wait and find out for yourselves?

107 Would you rather read one honest page of their diary about you, or never know and trust the look on their face?

108 The fight you keep having: would you rather end it with one of you giving in, or keep having it so nobody loses?

109 Would you rather let them see every bad mood you ever have, or show your best and hide the rest?

110 Would you rather be loved for who you are right now, or for who you're becoming?

111 You can borrow one thing from your partner for life. Would you rather borrow their calm, or their way with a joke?

112 One of you has to move for work. Would you rather follow them and start again, or stay and do a year long distance?

113 Ten years from now, would you rather laugh more, with less spark, or have more spark and less laughing?

114 At 70, would you rather be the two still out dancing, or the two who know every neighbor?

115 Your first place together comes up for sale. Would you rather buy it back one day, or never go back and leave it as it was?

116 You get to live one year again. Would you rather relive the year you met, or the hardest one, unafraid because you know you made it?

117 For a first "I love you", would you rather say it first, shaking, or wait for them to say it?

118 Your wedding video: would you rather watch it every anniversary, or never watch it and keep the memory?

119 Ten years married, one free night: would you rather go out like it's a first date, or stay in, phones off, early bed?

120 You get one marriage rule for life. Would you rather never go to bed angry, or never start a fight hungry?

121 You find your vows in a drawer. Would you rather read them out at dinner, or leave them where they are?

122 Fifty years on, on a bench: would you rather still argue over the same thing, or agree on absolutely everything?

123 You get one day on repeat forever. Would you rather keep the best day you've ever had, or one ordinary Tuesday?

124 You've got one last big trip. Would you rather go back to where you met, or somewhere you've never been?

125 If the two of you were a film, would you rather be a comedy with some sad bits, or a love story with bad jokes?

126 Years from now, everyone asks for your secret. Would you rather say it was all the laughing, or pure stubbornness?

127 One last thing to say to each other tonight. Would you rather say "I'd do it all again", or "I'd do it better now"?

128 For the road from here, would you rather know every turn ahead, or know only who's next to you?

129 You both wake up with no memory of each other. Would you rather find each other all over again, or trust you'd each be fine?